ANSWER ALL QUESTIONS IN THE SPACES PROVIDED

02 Item A: Taylors and Yorkshire Tea

Yorkshire Tea is made by Taylors of Harrogate, a family-owned business "devoted to the art of tea." Tea is made from the leaves of a bush that grows in countries such as India and Africa. Once picked, the tea leaves are dried and sold to tea producers around the world.

The production process at Yorkshire Tea starts when the tea leaves arrive at the firm's headquarters. Up to a thousand different teas are sent every day to the business from growers around the world. Professional tea tasters, who spend many years training and frequently visiting their overseas suppliers, then taste the tea. Following tasting, the chosen teas leaves are mixed together, bagged and packed ready for sale. To guarantee the quality of the tea, a sample of the final product is tasted again to ensure maximum customer satisfaction in terms of flavour. An efficient tea production process is vital to ensure the freshness and quality of the product.

Yorkshire Tea aims to invest in the supply chain and build strong, long-term relationships with its tea producers in order to gain a reliable and consistent supply of high quality tea leaves now and in the future. Taylors are committed to paying fair prices to its suppliers to ensure that the production of its tea is sustainable. The business prides itself on the quality of its tea.

Sustainability is a key focus behind all decisions made by Taylors. A recent example is the replacement of oil-based plastic in its tea bags with a plant based plastic called PLA. In addition, all Yorkshire Tea products are now CarbonNeutral® certified which has led to the planting of over 1.5 million trees in Kenya, with over 4,000 tea farmers.

Yorkshire Tea sales continue to grow in the UK. Last year, they grew 16.2% to £35 million compared with the same period the previous year resulting in Yorkshire Tea being the number one tea brand. Yorkshire Tea's products are sold all over the UK, in small and larger retailers, such as Tesco and Sainsbury's, as well as across the world.

Yorkshire Tea tries to ensure it always successfully meets customer expectations in terms of quality in its products. A recent survey of 2,000 tea drinkers, which focussed on their expectations of quality in tea, found that a consistent flavour or taste were the top priorities, followed by value for money and sustainability. The survey also found that each tea drinker in the UK uses an average of 1,460 tea bags a year.

02.1 Using Item A, calculate the average number of tea bags a tea drinker in the UK uses each day in one year.

Item B: Taylors and Yorkshire Tea

Taylors and the Yorkshire Tea brand work hard to actively interact with their customers, as the business recognises the importance of customer engagement in the sales process. As a result, the business has invested £484,000 in charitable and community activities in the UK, such as encouraging people to take up cricket, and a further £1,423,075 into programmes to support the long term sustainability of its tea supply chain. This includes teaming up with the Woodland Trust and schools around the UK and Kenya to plant trees. Yorkshire Tea regularly updates its customers on its Facebook page, Twitter account and website with news about the business and issues it feels its customers will be interested in, such as the environment and sustainability.

Despite Yorkshire Tea's customer engagement activities, the Marketing Director at Yorkshire Tea believes that most people today are not engaged with tea as a product, as many just buy the same tea they grew up drinking. He believes the business needs to do more to engage positively with its customers, as this will allow the business to stand out from its rivals and increase its sales.

Recently, Yorkshire Tea conducted some independent research that revealed that despite being a nation of tea lovers, the UK population is quite traditional in their tea drinking. Of the sample surveyed, one in three admitted they were not adventurous when it comes to drinking tea, one third have enjoyed their tea the same way all through life and one in five simply drink it the same way as their parents. Therefore, Yorkshire Tea and Taylors recognise the difficulties in encouraging consumers to switch tea brands.

02.4 Define the term customer engagement.
